

Why Work With a Technology Advisor?

Are you wondering if your business could use a technology advisor? Depending on your size, needs, and goals, using an expert partner for technology decisions could provide significant advantages to your business.

Answer the questions below to see if working with an experienced guide could be the right move.

Can you perform a digital transformation by yourself?

If you are considering moving certain systems to the cloud or undergoing any kind of digital transformation, a technology advisor is crucial for selecting the right solutions.

Beyond choosing which technologies are right for you, the advisor will also handle the implementation and management of those systems.

Are you comfortable dealing with carriers and providers alone?

Negotiating with the big internet service providers and other carriers is notoriously time-consuming and headache-inducing. Even if you are successful at getting them to troubleshoot with you and help you solve problems, are you sure you're paying only for what you get?

A technology advisor is your advocate and handles every necessary interaction with those carriers while leveraging their industry relationships to get you the best price.

Are you spending time and resources on IT and telecom that should be spent on growing your business?

A common issue for most growing businesses – especially small to mid-sized ones – is the challenge of balancing IT needs with work that contributes to growth.

If your IT team is bogged down with menial tasks that inhibit them from being strategic or making plans for future expansion, you could be in need of a technology advisor to take on those tasks and let your team get back to the valuable work at hand.

Can you be sure your business is safe?

Every business today – no matter the size – is at risk of breach by sophisticated hackers and malicious actors. Hackers create more advanced ways of attacking businesses by the day, and smaller organizations are no longer safe from invasive tactics.

Implementing cyber security solutions is the smartest way to safeguard against the inevitable data breach, and using a technology advisor who has the expertise to know which tools are best for your business can save a lot of time and hassle.
